

1990, is known throughout 30-acre garder great gardens of

By Pam Lundbore Home & Real Estate editor

vracuse resident Kathleen Ouigley's new book, "The Summer Cottage: Retreats of the 1000 Islands," showcases her picks of the most captivating summer homes in that region

Since early childhood. Quieley spent the summers at her family cottage on Lake Ontario. As a girl, she said, she'd cruise un the river and admire the same Thousand Islands homes year after year. "I was fascinated by the boathouses," she said. "The architecture intrigued me." Quigley, a freelance writer who has been featured in The New York Times and Architectural Digest, will sign copies of her book at 1 p.m. Sunday at the Onondaga Historical Association. This will be the first opportunity for the public to buy the book She will also sign books at 7 p.m. April 6 at Barnes & Noble bookstore in DeWitt

nptation

SYRACUSE AUTHOR COMPILES BOOK ON SUMMER RETREATS OF THE THOUSAND ISLANDS REGION

I had an idea of the landmark cottages, so it was just a matter of infoling out who the owners are, "see said, "They were so gracious and roud of their places. They were thrilled to show me around."

The book features photographs from Syracuse photographer James Scherzi.

The book contains 24 chanters, features.

ing a variety of properties for their unique characteristics. For instance, Fox Run, a 30-acre estate, is featured because the Smithostain Institution declared in one of the Smithostain Institution declared in one of the of the most famous estates in the islands, is featured for its historic significance. A home on Pullman Island is featured because of the extensive remodeling that brought the property back to its former glory, Sunnyside, an order than the state of the state of the state of the designed.

It's the attention to the historic significance of some of the cottages that intrigued the Onondaga Historical Association, said Executive Director Gregg Tripoli. The Thousand Islands. Tripoli said, attract a large number of Central New York vacationers, so there is a strong local interest. Plus, he added the writing and photography are breathtaking.

"It's a great coffee-table book," he said.

Quigley said this book was a two-year project.

"I think the architecture sort of speaks to me," Quigley said of her desire to write the book about the cottages. "And there are a bunch of wonderful people up there."

sunsets and entertain.

This brass firendare is in the dining room of La Duchesse, a 106-foot houseboat on view at the Antique Boat Museum in Clayton. The boat, built in 1903, defined the luxury