Syracuse, N.Y. -- Tickets are still available for Tuesday night's showing of the new documentary, "Beneath the Surface: The Storied History of Onondaga Lake."

"Get them while you can," said Gregg Tripoli, executive director of the Onondaga Historical Association and the film's executive producer. "It looks like we're headed for another sell-out."

The film's premier was sold out in January.

Showtime is 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Palace Theatre, on James Street, in Syracuse. Tickets are $20, and can be purchased online at the historical association website. Groups of 10 or more get a discount of $5 per ticket.

Tickets will be sold online until 10 a.m. Tuesday. If any tickets remain after that, they will be sold at the door beginning at 6 p.m.

The 76-minute film is the association's first full-length documentary. It tracks the history of the lake from the sacred waters of the Haudenosaunee Confederacy to the ongoing \$2 billion cleanup.

"It's a local lake," Tripoli said, "but it has had a national impact."
