

Construction delays Creekwalk signs

Syracuse has put off installing signs along the Onondaga Creekwalk this year to accommodate construction of a hotel in Armory Square.

The city planned to install signs with new logos designed in the spring by a Syracuse University communication design class, said Andrew Maxwell, the city's director of planning and sustainability.

Public access to the walk has been limited by the construction of a Marriott hotel in Armory Square, and it didn't make practical sense to install the signs this year, he said. The Creekwalk runs along the creek from Armory Square to Onondaga Lake.

The city is working with the Onondaga Historical Association to create signs that tell visitors about historic areas along the walk, as well as provide them with directions, Maxwell said.

The city plans to have people vote for their favorite designs, he said.

The signs will be installed some time next year, Maxwell said.